The play takes place in a cozy Saltspring Island bungalow where Bill, an insecure dentist, who is going through a mid-life crisis, and his wife Sarah, who is 9 1/2 months pregnant, are anxiously awaiting the birth of their first child. Soon a wacky group of Islanders appear, and Christmas is thrown into crisis. However, a well-known figure appears, and the story takes another bizarre and hilarious turn.

Nichole Cavendish, originally from Penticton, is one of Canada's premier actors and directors. She describes this play as "strange and love filled". It was based very loosely on 'The Wizard of Oz'. Anyone who knows Niki is aware of her wicked sense of humour.

* some adult humour

They have shared a lot of memories, but they don't share the same taste in women nor the values necessary to make a relationship last. Huey's marriage has failed, but instead of moving on, he decides that he can only regain his "manhood" by pursuing his ex-wife Janice once again, and winning back her love. By enlisting the aid of Aldo, Huey has a plan to recapture the love that he and Janice once shared. The hilarious tale that ensues is also a heart-warming lesson for anyone who succeeds in their ability to love another.

* Adult situations and dialogue.

Presented by Special Permission of Samuel French Inc.

Directed by Matt Brown

April 2012

April 25 - 28 8:00 pm

Arthur Kipps, a middle-aged solicitor, hires a theatre and the services of a professional actor to help him re-enact - and thereby hopefully exorcise - a ghostly event which befell him many years previously with horrifyingly tragic results. From the cluttered stage, Kipps begins to read his story: painfully, self-consciously and hesitantly at first, but, coached by the actor and aided by the theatrical artifice, he grows in confidence an ability as he assumes a variety of roles and the play moves from narration to enactment. The actor portrays the young Kipps, sent north by his London firm to settle the estate of an elderly recluse, the late Mrs. Drablow, in whose isolated marshland house Kipps encounters the Woman in Black. This specter, seeking vengeance, attaches herself to Kipps and unleashes a macabre sequence of events which culminate in a truly chilling twist in the play's final moments.

If you enjoy a thriller, this is the play for you!
